My dear Sir. I thank you very much for your interesting letter in reference to Keats; which I have already utilised in my London Letter to the country papers,
and, as you will see,
in this Journal.

I will certainly avail myself of your kind invitation to call on you, and should much like to see the photograph to which you allude. I received some time ago from Miss Condon Clarke

— who is a very old friend of yours — a photograph of the sketch made by your father
during the last week of Keats's illness, with a copy of the touching words he wrote on the occasion, and also Charles Cowden Clarke's description as to the closeness of the likeness.

Keats awakened in me the love of poetry when I was quite a boy and long before I knew anything of his touching history.

Then chance threw me in the way of the Clarkes, and I used

Dear Sir

I am very much obliged for the article in Friday's paper you have been kind enough to send to me. It is very much owing to the assistance given to Count Sarsfield by the press of this country that he shall have been enabled to bring matters to a satisfactory conclusion. The next point will be to advocate a mediation in preference to any arbitration. First & all to press the necessity of speedily liberating those prisoners from the dungeons of Naples.

Believe me Sir with gratitude your most hbd. Ser.t
